Taxation of Health Care Benefits
It is understood that if the Domestic Partner or their children do not qualify as the dependents of the employee under the applicable requirements of Section 152 of the Internal Revenue Code, the cost of providing health benefits for them will be considered taxable income and subject to income and payroll tax withholding for the employee. Any under-reporting of income or under-withholding of tax by the State System which is caused, directly or indirectly, by the employee having provided inaccurate or incomplete information or having failed to notify the State System of any change in circumstances which affects the taxability of all or any portion of the employee’s benefits is the responsibility of the employee and the State System will have no liability for such under-reporting or under-withholding.

The State System recommends that each employee planning to enroll his/her Domestic Partner or children of the Domestic Partner under any State System benefit program consult with a qualified tax professional for guidance as to the tax issues involved and their application to the employee’s specific situation.
